Susmera Cholayil has been patiently waiting to harvest mangoes. While the harvest is usually in the third week of April, this year, there has been a delay of over four weeks at her family-owned, 90-acre mango grove in Vengal village in Tiruvallur, Tamil Nadu.

"In 2022, the yield from our farm was average, and last year it was good. But this year, the yield is less than average due to drastic changes in climatic conditions," says Susmera who offers a variety of kathergoa, Kalapad, swarnarekha, senthura, arka aruna, imampasand, alphonso and Banganapalli mangoes at the Farm to Table store in Anna Nagar.

Whether it is organic or commercial farming, mango farmers are disappointed by the plummeting yields this year, a result of South India being hit by insufficient rains and extreme heat waves.

"My 35-acre mango orchard yielded just 3% (17 varieties including native varieties), while last year we had an above average harvest and the reason for this is unseasonal rains and extreme fluctuations in climate," says Jayanth Kaliappan, an engineer-turned-organic farmer, whose farm is located in Bodinayakanur, in Theni.

Jayanth says that they will be harvesting mangoes only during the first week of June. "Though the yield is low, the quality and the taste of the fruit is good," says Jayanth adding that due to less produce available in the market, the rates of the fruits are higher than usual.

"We sold the Bengaluru variety of mango at ₹10 per kilogram last year, but this year we are selling it at ₹50. As the yield is less, the season also will be shorter this year," says

Where to find mangoes this year

Seasonal rains, mist and a heat wave have reduced mango yields by almost 80% across South India. Nevertheless, we help you spot the best mangoes in this brief season

Susmera, who has just started harvesting and distributing to customers, who placed orders much in advance. Though the cost has tripled this year, mango lovers seem undeterred.

According to Gopi Devarajan of Safe Foods, an organic store in the city, the procurement from farmers has reduced by almost 75% this year, which explains the reason for the higher price. "We source imampasand from a small farm in Salem. Normally they would harvest 200 kilograms during the season, but this year it was less than 20 kilos," he says.

Co-founder of Organic Farmers Market and ReStore, a volunteer-run, non-profit organic retail outlet in Chennai, Anantha Sayanam says, "The overall yield in mango is just 10 to 30%, or I would say the farmers harvested no more than three or four tonnes this season. At OFM, we stock a few varieties such as Kalapad, Banganapalli, imampasand, alphonso and malgova."

Co-founder of The Organic Shandy, Hari Sethuraman, who manages a 70-acre orchard with over 6,000 mango trees in Punnamai village in Cheyyur taluk, says that based on his experience as an organic farmer for the past 28 years, he observes that the yield this year has been lower than normal, though he adds that their farm has had an average yield compared to other farms in the neighbourhood. He says that yields vary from farm to farm depending on soil quality and how well the trees are nurtured.

Treasure hunt
There is a wide variety available – if you look in the right places.

Spirit of the Earth, which has been popularising heritage rice varieties, has also been focussing on the revival of native mango varieties this season. At their farm in Manjakkudi in Thanjavur, the harvesting is being planned for June. Priyanka Navneeth from Spirit of the Earth store in Chennai, says,

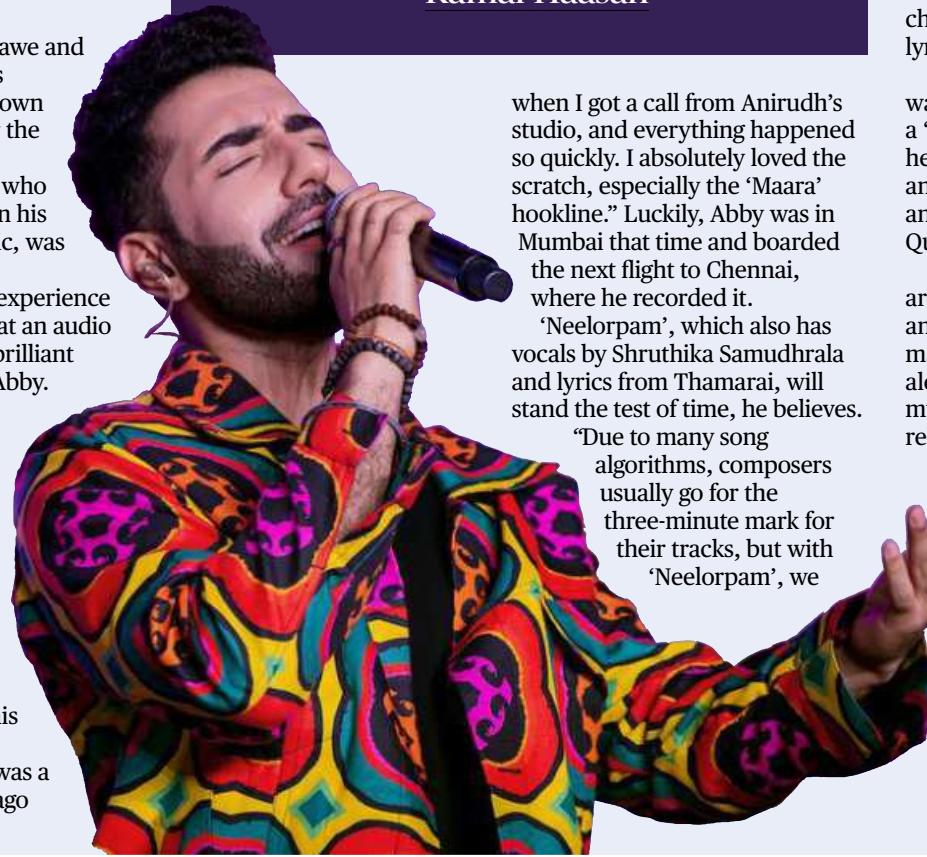

"Though the mango season is going to be brief, the quality and taste of the fruits are excellent, especially gulab khas, panchadhara kalasam, kesari and Kalapad," says Priyanka. At their store they have stocked kesar, banganapalli, Kalapad and imampasand.

Prasanna Venkataraman of Mango Point, which offers single origin, carbide and chemical-free mangoes sourced from Tiruvallur, Kanchipuram and Chengalpet districts of Tamil Nadu says they cover 9,000 hectares of mango groves and source 50,000 metric tonnes of mangoes. Though the yield has dropped by 25 percent this year, he has a range of popular mangoes on sale. The best sellers are imampasand, Kalapad and senthura, though other varieties such as Banganapalli, alphonso, neelam, mallika and rasalu are also available. He adds that the consumers seem to prefer senthura and imampasand to Banganapalli over the last few years.

Nirupama Reddy of Hanu Reddy Raghava Farms near Chengalpet, says that the yield from their farm which has over 2,000 mango trees, has been reasonably good compared to the previous year. They predominantly grow the Banganapalli variety by using traditional farming methods and bio-pesticides. They sold 15 tonnes of mangoes last year, are positive about selling the same amount this year.

The voice of Indian 2

Abby V, a singer-songwriter from Canada, has crooned for Anirudh in the upcoming film Indian 2 starring Kamal Haasan went for more than five minutes, a rarity in film songs today. Singers are usually told to keep it simple but this track has some intricate vocal nuances, for which Anirudh gave me complete freedom."

On a high note
Regulars on Instagram might be aware of Abby's musical prowess; if he drops a Carnatic music-based Reel that sees him exploring a raga one day, he might put out a "water balloon" challenge of guessing song lyrics the next day.

One of his most viral videos was in 2020 when he dropped a '73 ragas with Abby', in which he explored both Hindustani and Carnatic ragas back to back and was a fun take on the 73 Questions by Vogue series.

"I keep changing things around. I am an entertainer and it's my responsibility to make good art, and have fun along the way," says the musician, who also recently released 'Nee Nee Nee', an original track that he performed along with Andrea Jeremiah.

He considers his upbringing in Canada a "huge blessing".

something that helped him get exposed to different styles of music. "Even when I perform, I try to incorporate things I have imbibed as I grew up. People have commented on how my hand gestures resemble those of an R&B or hip-hop artiste. You can see all those influences in my singing too," says Abby, who is currently listening to the other tracks of Indian 2 and AR Rahman's Chamkila, apart from pop music.

A fresh sound
Abby has vivid memories of listening to AR Rahman's soundtrack of the original Indian, which released in 1996. "Pretty iconic songs, right," he says, "We have watched all of Shankar sir's previous films, and my father is a huge fan of Kamal Haasan. When I found out that this song of mine was for Indian 2, I was like, 'Oh my god, that's a lot of pressure.' But for this second part, we just wanted to put out a fresh sound and style of singing."

'Neelorpam' might have just released, but Abby has already recorded a few more film songs that will be out soon. "With film work, there is so much of collective energy that comes in, because the director and producer too gives feedback, and that involvement helps shape up a number. I really enjoy that process and am looking forward to more of that."

Tunes from the mottamaadi

In front of about 8,000 people at Chennai's Nehru Stadium, Abby V sang. At the recent audio launch of the much-awaited Indian 2, starring Kamal Haasan, this young singer - who grew up in a Tamilian household in Toronto, Canada - impressed the who's who of the Tamil film fraternity.

Watching his performance with awe and happiness were his parents who had flown in from Canada for the big day; his father, Venky V, someone who was instrumental in his initiation into music, was present as well.

"It was my first experience of performing live at an audio launch and it was brilliant experience," says Abby.

The singer crooned 'Neelorpam', the only melody in the Shankar-directed Indian 2, which has music by Anirudh. While he has sung a couple of tracks in other films previously, this is his first major breakthrough. "It was a couple of months ago when I got a call from Anirudh's studio, and everything happened so quickly. I absolutely loved the scratch, especially the 'Maara' hookline." Luckily, Abby was in Mumbai that time and boarded the next flight to Chennai, where he recorded it.

'Neelorpam', which also has vocals by Shruthika Samudhrala and lyrics from Thamarai, will stand the test of time, he believes.

"Due to many song algorithms, composers usually go for the three-minute mark for their tracks, but with 'Neelorpam', we

This World Environment Day, meet the duo behind India's first biosphere in a tiger reserve

Life in a biosphere

Nidhi Adlakha
nidhi.adlakha@thehindu.co.in

About a decade ago, New Delhi-based entrepreneur Jai Dhar Gupta became a clean air activist when he was diagnosed with bronchial asthma. His motive was to spread knowledge about the need to ensure our cities breathe easy. He was also on the air pollution think tank of the Delhi Government (wherein he helped bring into effect the odd-even rule for vehicles).

Over the past few years, Jai has been working on yet another project: creating India's first biosphere within a tiger reserve. "Rajaji Raghati Biosphere (RRB) is a 35-acre private forest initiative led by ecologist Vijay Dhasmana, who is known for restoring the Aravalli landscapes. We have identified rare and endangered species of native trees and are attempting to revive them, and protect the area from poachers and mining," says the 51-year-old.

Situated within the Rajaji

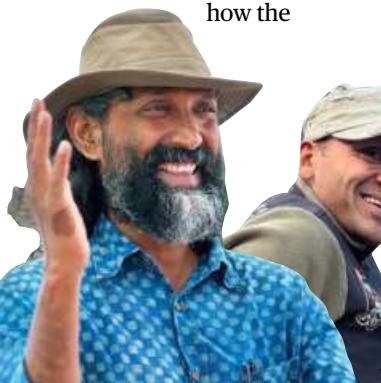

National Park in Uttarakhand, the biosphere overlooks the rocky white Raghati riverbed, nestled in the Shivalik foothills. Jai says when they started, the land earmarked for RRB was barren and in a state of degradation. "It had been previously flattened, eroding natural contours and leading to severe soil erosion. Moreover, monoculture agro-forestry with non-native eucalyptus trees was practised on the land, it deteriorated the ecosystem's health further," he says, adding, "Thousands of non-native eucalyptus trees were removed within days of acquiring the land. Subsequently, the land was contoured to retain water, prevent erosion, and promote groundwater recharge."

The duo and their team conducted extensive surveys to identify suitable native plant species, especially those rare or disappearing in the region. "We collected seeds, established a seed bank, and collaborated with biodiversity parks to germinate and cultivate saplings of trees such as haldu, rohini, mala, saal, jamun, pangana, etc, which were then planted across the biosphere," says Jai, who has also banned combustion-engine vehicles in the region.

In 2023, the duo initiated the first phase of plantation, introducing approximately 80 species. "This upcoming monsoon season, we plan to incorporate an additional 35 to 40 new species in the biosphere. However, transforming an area into a thriving forest ecosystem is a gradual process. It's estimated to take another two to three years for the forest to truly resemble a natural habitat," adds Jai. Once the plantation is complete, the team needs to be mindful about how the plants will interact with wildlife in the area, says Vijay. "The final result will be a mosaic of forest communities within the land, with self-establishing and self-nurturing abilities, as found in the adjoining forest patch of Rajaji Tiger Reserve," he explains.

"The focus of this agricultural land extends beyond combating climate change to establish a harmonious model of cohabitation," says Jai, adding that they are relying on the knowledge and skills of the local nomadic community – Gujjars.

But, why does India need such biospheres? Jai explains how forest models such as RRB offer a promising approach not only to combatting deforestation, but to growing our forests too.

The process of getting it all together has not been easy. "Logistical hurdles like land acquisition, regulatory compliance, and long-term sustainability planning could impede the widespread adoption of the private biosphere model," says Jai, adding "Collaborative efforts among governments, private entities, and local communities are crucial in overcoming these hurdles and realising the potential of private biospheres."

Jai and Vijay are also working on a second biosphere atop the Western Ghats: above the Koyna River in the buffer zone of the Sahyadri Tiger Reserve near Pune, Maharashtra. "It has a very different habitat, different topography, and completely different flora," says Jai who plans on growing Lagerstroemia microcarpa (nana), Catunaregum spinosa (gela) and Ziziphus xylocarpa (torna) among other species.

Kick-starting pride

Poetry, panels and panache. This is how Prakriti Foundation plans on celebrating Pride Month

sanjana.g@thehindu.co.in

The month of June is closely tied to a history of dissent and identity. Members of the LGBTQIA+ community have subverted the narrative of traumatic events in the history of queer marginalisation, to establish a month where the community speaks loudly and celebrates its identity with panache.

Prakriti Foundation shares this sense of building a community. The organisation kicks off Pride Month this year with a poetry reading session, panel discussion and a transgender fashion show at Alliance Francaise of Madras on June 9.

"Identity is at the core of arts, literature and performance," says Ranvir Shah, founder-trustee of Prakriti Foundation. "It is hence natural that we are allies."

The evening will begin with a poetry reading session in English by Bengaluru-based poet and independent writer Joshua Muyiwa, who works on stories around art, culture, race and sexuality. Alongside him, model, teacher and writer of Virkadha Vaanam, Agni Pradeep, will be speaking about her life and work in understanding gender-fluidity through verse in Tamil.

A panel discussion by Jaydeep Sarkar, the director of the series Rainbow Rishta, actor Negha, and L Ramakrishnan of queer collectives like Orinam and SAATHI, will discuss the portrayal of queer people in mainstream media.

While Negha, the first trans woman to win the debut actor award at the 52nd Kerala State Film Awards, will speak about the opportunities available to trans actors, Ramakrishnan will talk about the role of non-government organisations (NGOs) in the assistance of creating policy and providing aid during crisis intervention. Director Jaydeep will speak about the story behind the making of Rainbow Rishta, a series widely regarded for its accurate portrayal of queer relationships.

This will be followed by a queer fashion show by members from Sahodaran, one of the oldest community-based collectives for the LGBTQIA+ community in the city. Although this is Prakriti Foundation's first such pride event, Shah says that they have spotlit several queer authors before through their events on resistance poetry, dance and art. He adds that they are hoping for several other conversations on inclusivity in the future.

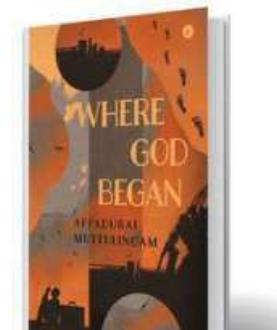

Harish Subramanian, programme coordinator, Prakriti, says that a conscious decision was made to ensure that local talent which speaks in the mother tongue, Tamil, is present at this queer festival. He adds, "We are also hoping to end the night with a celebratory dance through a DJ session."

Pride with Prakriti is on June 9 from 6pm at Alliance Francaise of Madras, 24, College Road, Nungambakkam. Entry is free.

A place called home

Sri Lankan writer Appadurai Muttulingam's latest English translation Where God Began, tells stories of love, loss, and the hope of refugees would be a historical record," he says. But this, he found out, was a monumental task.

This work eventually took on the form of fiction, which Muttulingam says "is 90% real". It took him two years to put it together. "The stories have elements of love, marriage, death, murder... all of which the protagonist encounters during his journey," he points out. But what makes the novel throb with life are the many people in its pages, each with their own little stories.

Alalya, who had been selected for a medical course in Sri Lanka, but had to give it up to go to Germany; Chandra Mami, a keen observer of Nature, on her way to France to be with her daughter; the 'refugee magistrate' from Colombo who had to flee after the war broke out...

Muttulingam writes about these people with sensitivity and attention to detail. The little things add warmth: one encounters a group of refugees in Germany which saves money with their refugee allowance, buys a video deck and watches the popular Pandiyarajan Tamil film Aan Paavam.

Muttulingam started writing extensively after his retirement. "I was in a very serious job, and was responsible for countries such as Somalia and Afghanistan," he remembers, adding that he did maintain notes of things that caught his attention. He now has 20 books to his credit, including three novels set in places such as Canada and Afghanistan, short stories, interviews, and essays. Muttulingam says he has now stopped creative writing, and is working on taking the works of Tamil writers to international publications, as well as translating articles from such publications for the benefit of Tamil readers.

Muttulingam says he was fortunate to leave Sri Lanka before the Civil War broke out. He was married and had two children, when he received a telegram one morning in 1972 with a job offer in Sierra Leone. "I hadn't even applied for it," he chuckles, adding that a friend who worked in the company had recommended his name. Till then, Muttulingam, who was working as a general manager in an automobile company, had not planned on relocating to a different country. "There were several restrictions by the Government then; it was difficult to even buy milk for my children," he recalls. He thus left his home country, eventually living in different parts of the world. "I have been very lucky in a lot of ways," he says.

It has been 20 years since Muttulingam visited Sri Lanka. His ancestral home, that has now been refurbished and sold, was damaged during the war. "I don't want to see my home after what it went through," he says. "I want to remember only the good parts."

For everyone who grew up watching the Disney Channel in the Noughties, the High School Musical movies were a rite of passage.

"We are bringing everything that people have loved about the High School Musical series to the stage," says Deandra Clementine Nicholas. The 23-year-old director is helming a stage adaptation of the first High School Musical film through Wildcats: The Musical with a young cast and crew bringing alive oodles of teen spirit on stage this weekend in Chennai.

"We just have one new character and a new song added. I have made a few changes to tailor it for our stage," she says.

Much like the first film, Wildcats: The Musical follows Gabriella, a new student at East High as she strikes up an unlikely friendship over music with the school's star basketball player, Troy. There is a ton of drama, sport, and of course, music and dance along the way, courtesy

East High's many colourful cliques and characters.

While they expected a handful to show up for the initial audition call, nearly 80 people registered to try their luck at being cast. With Deandra being the oldest member of this production, youngsters fresh out of school and in college comprise a majority of the cast.

Over the last three months, Deandra says the cast has been trained in singing by their vocal conductor Antara Sarah Chacko, and in dance by their choreographer Vishnulakshmi.

"Along with Uthara Menon who is our executive producer, we have been working together as a core team on this big production. This is my first time working on a production of this magnitude, and it has been a learning experience, especially in patience," says the young director.

On June 8 at The Music Academy, TTK Road. Tickets are available on allevents.in and are priced from ₹250 onwards.

Veteran actor Sathyaraj is gung-ho about his upcoming Tamil film which, he feels, has enough material to have its own cinematic universe

My secret weapon

Gopinath Rajendran
gopinath.raj@thehindu.co.in

Very few actors' on-screen persona feel like an extension of their real-life selves and Sathyaraj is a textbook example of that. The jokes and banter his films are famous for also seep into interviews with him. When quipped about giving back-to-back interviews, a laughing Sathyaraj goes, "I was answering the same questions and after a while, I began looking at our production manager and started singing 'Innum Ennai Enna Seiya Pogirai'." But the veteran actor loves talking about films; he is currently excited about upcoming release, Weapon. Excerpts from a chat:

Question: Your favourite actor MGR did Kalai Arasi (1963), regarded as Tamil cinema's first space film, but there has been a dearth of experimental films from the fantasy genre. Why do you think so?

Answer: Fantasy films are comparatively more expensive to make and many more aspects come into play. Nowadays, it also involves a lot of CG work and only after receiving the output do we know what the final product looks like. It needs a certain sense of confidence to pull off a fantasy film and probably that's the reason we have had far and few in between. I feel Weapon will start a trend.

Q: How different are films like Weapon compared to the regular ones you have done all these years?

Connecting the dots

After playing a cop in Rajinikanth's Jailer last year, Vasanth Ravi is on a different mission this time around, in Weapon, directed by Guhan Senniappan. "The idea is not to repeat the genres, and the shift is based on the scripts I receive. I also look out for strong points in my character that would generate interest and curiosity for the audience," says Vasanth. Vasanth adds that he likes the vision of the directors he has worked with, and Weapon is no different. "Director Guhan has been consuming a lot of DC and Marvel comics and anime since childhood. For me, listening to the script itself was like a fantasy. He explained the different worlds, and how he wants to connect them and do the equivalent of Hollywood's cinematic universes."

A: In Weapon, I have done what was expected from me but I am waiting to see the final version to see how it has panned out. Weapon has enough material to have its own cinematic universe, concepts we have only seen in Hollywood. This genre of films also caters to children and they obviously have to be accompanied by parents (laughs). If this turns out to be a franchise, it will become a comfortable space for senior actors like me, akin to Harrison Ford in the Indiana Jones film series.

I was pleasantly taken aback by the producer's conviction with this project. To be honest, I know I'm not a saleable actor to centre a film around me; I'm just a busy character actor.

Q: Is it easy to pre-visualise such a film during the narration stage?

A: On the very first day of the shoot, I was told to prepare for an action sequence and I thought it would be another run-of-the-mill one. But they impressively shot it for a week and that gave me confidence with this film. The usual family dramas that I used to do

Q: Villadhi Villain, your only directorial venture, was a huge hit. Why didn't you return to the director's chair again?

A: I have made a lot of mistakes in my career and one of them was not continuing to direct. Villadhi Villain was a hit and if director Sathyaraj had stayed active, he would have retained the sellability of hero Sathyaraj. I don't know if I can return to direction now.

As an actor, I have about eight films and a few web series in different stages. It's already been announced that I'm a part of some of them like Mazhai Pidikatha Manithan and Valli Mayil, as well as web series like Gangs. Apart from three Telugu films and a Hindi one that I'm going to start soon, I have also signed up for three Tamil series.

Q: Where does this understanding and self-awareness of your market stem from?

A: 47 years ago, before I left for Chennai, my friends would pull my legs asking if I would become like MGR and Sivaji. I just wanted to give it a shot and even if acting did not work out, I knew I could become something along the lines of a production manager. A successful venture is good but I always prepare for the worst-case scenarios.

Q: What is your message to the young actors who are looking to follow in your footsteps?

A: I would tell them to be true to themselves and their craft. Don't copy others; find your own voice and style. And always remember that hard work pays off.

Q: You have been in the industry for over four decades. What keeps you motivated?

A: The love and appreciation from fans and colleagues keep me motivated. I also enjoy the creative aspect of acting and directing.
